I really want to take care of my aging parents. However, in terms of economic situation in Japan, I state children cannot provide room and board for their aging parents. I have two reasons to support my opinion.

First, Japan has problems about economy life we have to pay not only pensions but also many kinds of taxes and the minimum wage is low.

So, we can't afford to spend money for others unless we are rich.

In fact, in Japan, young people can't earn a lot but they have to pay average pension taxes 16,950 yen every month. If we continue to pay this amount of money until we are 60 years old, its sum will be about 8 million yen. Besides there are other kinds of taxes. We afford to go university with this tax without debt. Our lives are restricted by taking care of them.

Second, we can give back to our parents by giving presents or by accompanying them for dinners our family gathering and even medical check out. For example, I think there is a way that we can take them to care giving facilities. If we take care of them, there is no time to play together with our friends, we may not be able
